Good morning, Mrs. King!

I believe there still remains a miscommunication regarding legal testing practices. Further, there remains illegality regarding the copying/recording of exam questions themselves. In our previous discussions you claimed the copying was prohibited due to copyright concerns. While that doesn't override a student's right to participate in the University Grade dispute policy, I was willing to make the concession as the main dispute I had with the Syllabus was resolved. Seeing as that is not the case anymore, I have decided to ignore that provision of the Syllabus as any action taken against me under that policy would only arise out of the dispute of a question and CSU would have to actively deny due process to me as a student to take such action.

Finally, I am also investigating potential claims against the University in regards to active dissuasion from the use and denial of student accommodations granted by the Office of Disability Services. I must first determine if the University staff did indeed violate any laws in that process or if this action was retaliation for the dispute of syllabus policies and then I will begin the process of litigating these claims.

As a side note, I currently have confidential settlement documents in the form of late arriving 1099s scattered about my work area and there is not enough time to secure them. Any breach of confidentiality will be included in claims brought against the University.

Thank you very much for your time and assistance.

Cordially,

Aaron M. Ogletree
